ELLIOTY, called the attention of the sufficient to a most beautiful Hosewood Harble Top Table, placed on the Exhibition Stage last Saturday by the Senior Class. and intended by them as a present to himself. But it being nonceive presents from their pupils, it was received and would remain, not a present to him, but to the Nashville Female Academy: and he desired the editor of the Dodly Gamille, to take notice of this by may of correcting his report of this transaction. He assured the young ladies of the Senior Claus, that, outside of his own immediate family, he had no higher ambuten than that of being recogniced as a means of the advancement of their future well-being. The communicatest Valedictory was delivered by Miss Farst A

Every member of the Senior Class having been heard in the reading of a special Ermy, as well as in the accompanying Exercises, the President proceeded in a plain, brief, extemporaneou way, to address the graduating class of forty members, and to gran their respective diplomas.

He said there was an injurest in the occasion itself that could not be increased by words; and it could not be his purpose to diver! the attention of the andience from the young ladies to himself It was hardly possible for any one present to appreciate his feellogs. It was now more than a quarter of a century since he be came a teacher—since (outside of his own family) he had cherished no ambition or expectation of this life, security and apart from bis pupils. Such a life, as far as companionship for a man of his years is concerned, might be regarded as escendingly solitary. A due realization of the labor, and self-denial of such a life, might give some idea of his feelings at this moment. It was an occasi o him of exceeding great reloicing. He felt it to be a persona honor to stand where he stood, and to be situated as he was. Du ring this period of his labora, scores of bundreds of his pupils hall bern sent forth from this Institution, and they were scattered throughout the length and breadth of the southern country. He asked the world to judge of the character of the teaching and training to which his natural had been subjected, us evinced in those qualities of the head and heart which adorn the domestic circle, and prepare its members for the haven of sternal rest. * These were leading objects in the course of instruction, to which all his pupils were submitted; and with the present evidences of the success of these objects of his life, it might well by supposed that he could rejuice on an occasion like this. The young ladies receiving these diplomas, had been, many of thom, members of his family almost from their infancy, and they all could well enough appre ciate his feelings. The diplomas of the Nashville Female Academ whatever else might be said of that institution, were never won by favor, and could not be bought with money. The future of these young ladies might indicate what a wigh value was placed upon hese diplomas. They were obtained through a persevering course of study, and exclusion from many forms of indelgence generally allowed by parents. It was no easy matter to gain and to stand to the position of the members of this Senior Class.
